Using the landscape scenery around Hundalee Mill Farm as a starting point, this drawing course is an opportunity for students to explore and experiment with different approaches to making drawings in response to the landscape. With the emphasis on building confidence and developing drawing skills this course is suitable for all levels of drawing experience.

• DAY ONE

Using a variety of materials such as charcoal, pencil, pen and ink as well as natural materials found in the landscape, students will spend time experimenting with different mark-making techniques. Working on both large and smaller scales in direct response to the landscape as well as in the studio. Jenny will encourage students to explore independently, give opportunities for people to share their ideas and discoveries, as well as giving one to one tuition.

In the afternoon, Jenny will give a short slide talk on her own approach to drawing as well as showing examples of landscape drawing by a variety of other artists.

• DAY TWO

Using and building on drawing techniques developed on day one, students will work more independently. Through gathering information, collecting found materials and sketching from memory or directly in the field, the day will be spent developing a drawing or series of drawings in response to their experience of the surrounding scenery.
